The Full Skirt and its Modifications—American Women Refuse to Take it Seriously

The American woman is still dubious about full skirt. She refuses to take it seriously, insists upon compromises—and correctly so—making the most of every nation's best and rejecting the ugly features. And this is why she is called "The best dressed woman in the world."
While the American woman accepts the full bottomed skirt, she demands clinging lines, and many devices are contrived to lessen the fulness around the hips, and preserve a somewhat clinging effect at that point.

A straight front panel or breadth whose straight lines run quite to the waist band is frequently combined with a shallow shirred or corded yoke across hips and back.

Lengthwise side plaits, stitched half way to the knee adapt themselves readily to the new skirt line, and horizontal skirt trimming retains its vogue although, particularly in rich and heavy materials a perfectly plain skirt with no ornament save its long graceful folds is much in evidence.

My illustration shows an excellent model in a lengthwise side plaited skirt. Made of deep blue silk Krash, this model with its prettily plaited blouse, while easily copied is distinctly up to date.

The artistic negligee is rapidly gaining ground among American women, and room gowns made with the flowing sleeve effects are irresistible. Made of China or India silk they are extremely pretty, and among the lustrous Beau de Crepe, of which, in a soft Du Barry rose, the charming room gown I have illustrated is composed.

The dainty conceit is made with the wide pagoda sleeve, and deep fleche color, giving the long shoulder effect. It falls in graceful folds from the bust line—not to scant—nor yet full enough to be clumsy. The entire gown is edged with wide rather coarse thread ecru lace.

And the careful dressing "from the skin outward" is of the utmost importance with these garments. The day is passed for ill-fitting under garments, and the corset must fit like a glove, and at the same time should be entirely comfortable. A properly cut corset, such as any one of the C B A la Spirite models, instead of extending up to the breast bone and cramping the chest and its muscles, does not extend more than five inches above the waist line, leaving free the shoulder and chest, as well as the muscles of the diaphragm.

Council Meeting.

The council met Monday night in adjourned session.

The sewer problem in the second ward was solved by voting favorably on two sewers, the Cannon-Brown and Sturdevant-Williams, Hurt, Brickler and Buchanan were appointed appraisers.

The main sewer across the 3th and 4th wards was reported completed and ordered inspected.

The petition for a new voting precinct in the 4th was turned down. The complaint against the Harry tank factory was turned down. A manufacturing industry of that importance must make things a little lively in its immediate neighborhood. Try and keep step gentlemen.

"Yes, the winds did used to be more or less annoying", I had one experience that I shan't soon forget. I was wearin' one of them big heavy wool hats that had a brim nearly six inches wide. The whole hat weighed a full pound and was just about as stiff as a board. One day I was ridin' along over the prairie when the wind blew my hat off and it started it rollin' over and over like a wheel. I put my spurs to my cayuse and followed that hat as fast as my horse could run for seven miles. It never stopped rollin' and I thought I would have to give it up, but I had a good boss and it made me sort of mad to be beat by the wind that way, so I kept a-follerin'. Finally the hat, or what there was left of it, dropped into a chuck hole and stopped. I got off and picked it up and as true as I am here, gentlemen, I found that hat had been worn away from rollin' over the ground till there was only a little round piece about the size of a silver dollar left. That piece was right out of the center of the crown. I used it afterwards for shotgun wads. If it hadn't been for that I would have had it to show you, gentlemen, right now.
